Supporting the ITS industry for 31 years

As cities around the world continue to grow, their booming populations demand intelligent transport solutions – for both people and freight. The problems which urban mobility creates – such as congestion, pollution and road safety – are ever-present. But the amount of funding available to many transportation departments is diminishing. By helping make better use of existing infrastructure, intelligent transport systems are able to address many of these problems. For many cash-strapped authorities, ITS is the only realistic option on the table. However, the technology is changing rapidly – both in terms of hardware (expected to detect a growing number of parameters) and of software (making sense of the growing mountains of data most authorities hold). The rise of artificial intelligence adds further opportunities – and complications.

ITS International helps key staff in the world's transportation authorities keep up to date with all of the latest developments. Case studies highlight how innovative DoTs and other bodies use technology to overcome problems that echo those encountered by our global readership. The experienced editorial team scours the world's transport systems to bring readers the information they need to take the best informed decisions for solving problems within their own jurisdictions.

Established in 1995, ITS International is published six times a year and is available in Global and North America editions while its www.itsinternational.com website is updated every working day.

Adam has edited publications and websites across a range of industries. He began work as a business journalist in 1994 for Reed Business Publishing's Motor Transport magazine and has since written news, features and interviews in sectors including pharmaceuticals, public relations, transport, health, public affairs and the circular economy.

Adam is a regular member of the Daily News editorial team which reports from key industry events around the world.

NEW REGULAR FEATURE ITS PROJECT ANALYSIS

Successful deployment of ITS technology is crucial to realising the benefits in terms of traffic flow, congestion reduction, sustainability, emissions control and, above all, road safety.

In 2025 we produced an in-depth ITS Project Analysis report on the Netherlands' Talking Traffic real-time data initiative, following a similar report in 2024 on California's massive Coachella Valley CV Sync traffic management project. In 2026, ITS International will be looking at more deployment case studies of all sizes, focusing on outcomes.

If you have an ITS deployment that you think others would like to hear about – involving cities or regions in any part of the world – please contact ITS International editor Adam Hill at ahill@ropl.com with details.

Global circulation 37,641

At a time when marketing budgets are severely stretched, it is critical to gain the best return on your investments and guarantee the best value and coverage for your company in 2026. ITS International is officially the largest circulating, most requested and best read magazine in the industry and is your ideal first choice.

Advertisers in ITS International have the flexibility to select one of two circulation options: The Global offering, or a North America demographic.

North America circulation 18,688

The North America demographic is provided to enable companies that are only active within North America to advertise within ITS International without needing to invest in copies that would be of no direct benefit.

As part of ITS International's working relationship with ITS America & IBTTA, the magazine uniquely receives both associations membership databases annually for circulation management purposes. This ensures the cream of the North American located transportation community receives personalised copies of ITS International. These are the very people who buy, recommend and specify products and services, so advertising in ITS International puts your company directly in front of them.
